I. Introduction

1. The present report is the twenty-second consolidated report on the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms issued by the Secretary-General since the establishment of the Register.[1] The General Assembly, in paragraphs 3, 4, 5 and 6 (a) of resolution 68/43, called upon Member States to provide their data and information on international transfers of major conventional arms covered by the Register, including "nil" reports and additional background information, on an annual basis.

2. On 28 February 2014, the Secretariat sent a note verbale to Member States requesting them to submit their reports no later than 31 May 2014. The replies received are reproduced in sections II to IV and in the annex below. Any further national reports and additional information received from Governments will be issued as addenda to the present report.

3. In 2013, the map-based interactive database on the Register, launched in 2011, was further improved through the addition of several new functions. Well over half of those Member States that report are now using the online reporting tool.

4. The originals of the replies from Member States are available for Governments from the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat.[2] The annual reports and other relevant information on the Register are available on the website of the Register.[3]

Germany consistently pursues a restrictive export control policy as regards armaments and dual-use goods intended for military purposes. This policy is based on article 26 of the Basic Law (Constitution), under which the State is required to control war weapons at all stages from manufacture to marketing. This constitutional obligation is given statutory form through the War Weapons Control Act, the Foreign Trade and Payments Act and the Foreign Trade and Payments Regulation. To underline its political will to pursue a restrictive arms export policy and render transparent the way in which this policy is administered, the Government of Germany adopted, on 19 January 2000, a thoroughly revised version of the Political Principles Governing the Export of War Weapons and Other Military Equipment. The restrictive arms export policy of Germany is that war weapons may in principle be exported only to States members of the European Union or the North Atlantic Treaty Organization or countries that have been granted equivalent status by special decision. Deliveries to other countries are permitted only in exceptional and precisely defined circumstances.

A key factor in deciding whether to grant an export licence is the conditions within the recipient country, in particular the human rights situation. Furthermore, deliveries must not contribute to exacerbating existing tensions. Lastly, special attention is paid to ascertaining the definitive end use in the country of destination. At the end of the 1980s, intensified efforts by a number of countries to acquire equipment for the development and manufacture of weapons of mass destruction and delivery systems resulted in the extensive reform and further tightening of the German export control regime, notably concerning dual-use goods. The Government is committed to harmonizing arms export control policy at the European Union and international levels. The common basis of European arms export control was made legally binding on 8 December 2008, when the Council of the European Union adopted Council Common Position 2008/944/CFSP defining common rules governing control of exports of military technology and equipment, which contained eight common criteria for arms exports and procedure rules for the cooperation of States members of the European Union in this field. The European Union regulations on export controls for dual-use goods (Council of the European Union regulation 428/2009 of 5 May 2009) have contributed to greater harmonization in this field. Germany is actively involved in the various international control regimes to prevent the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and delivery systems (in particular the Nuclear Suppliers Group, the Australia Group and the Missile Technology Control Regime) and to harmonize the export of conventional arms and related dual-use goods, including a comprehensive, general exchange of information among participating Governments (Wassenaar Arrangement on Export Controls for Conventional Arms and Dual-Use Goods and Technology).

Germany was very actively involved in the negotiations on the Arms Trade Treaty, which was adopted by the General Assembly on 2 April 2013. Germany signed the Treaty at its opening for signature at the United Nations on 3 June 2013 and was among the first States to ratify it, depositing its instrument of ratification on 2 April 2014. On that occasion, Germany also declared the provisional application of articles 6 and 7 of the Treaty. Germany considers implementation assistance to be vital for the overall effective implementation of the Treaty and is willing to offer help to other signatories, in particular developing countries, on a bilateral basis and together with European Union partners. In 2013, Germany devoted considerable funds in this regard.

With reference to General Assembly resolution 66/39 on transparency in armaments, in particular to paragraph 5 (a), which reads:

> "5. Reaffirms its decision, with a view to further development of the Register, to keep the scope of and participation in the Register under review and, to that end:
> (a) Recalls its request to Member States to provide the Secretary-General with their views on the continuing operation of the Register and its further development and on transparency measures related to weapons of mass destruction",

Germany would like to make the following comments.

The United Nations Register of Conventional Arms has proved to be one of the few and effective global transparency measures. Germany strongly supports this instrument and has regularly reported to the Secretary-General. Even after the Arms Trade Treaty has entered into force, the Register will retain its usefulness until all States become parties to the Treaty.

Germany has also encouraged States to report in a comprehensive manner, including on small arms and light weapons. Germany believes that the inclusion of reporting on small arms and light weapons as a mandatory category of the Register would substantively enhance the usefulness of this instrument. In many parts of the world, small arms and light weapons are the main factor of instability, often exceeding heavy weaponry as a stability challenge. In general, it is small arms rather than heavy weaponry fuelling regional and internal conflicts.

The groups of governmental experts that convened in accordance with General Assembly resolutions 57/75, 60/226 and 63/69 and 66/39 in 2003, 2006, 2009 and 2013, respectively, all debated the possibility of including small arms and light weapons in the Register. With the adoption of the Arms Trade Treaty, the Register will serve as a reference at the moment of the entry into force of the Treaty. Given that the Treaty includes in its scope small arms and light weapons, including small arms and light weapons in the Register as well seems even more pertinent.

Germany is concerned about the declining number of reports submitted to the Secretary-General since the beginning of the past decade. Germany believes that a renewed effort should be made to strengthen the universal use of this instrument of transparency and trust-building, including by submitting "nil" reports. The online reporting mechanism established by the Office for Disarmament Affairs of the Secretariat is a very useful tool to that end.

In view of the dynamic technological progress and the resulting changes regarding the shape, operation and nature of conventional weapons, Germany regards it as essential to allow for a flexible and proper evolution of the Register. Owing to the recommendations of the respective groups of governmental experts, the Register has been further developed since its establishment. However, Germany believes that technology has evolved even faster in this period, allowing for the emergence of new weaponry, potent enough to have an impact on overall military effectiveness, but without being properly reflected in the Register. Therefore, Germany believes that it is time for a more fundamental debate on the nature of the categories, in particular with regard to a further technological acceleration in the future.

Lebanon

[Original: Arabic]
[16 April 2014]

The Ministry of Defence of Lebanon wishes to state that it has neither transferred nor imported any conventional weapons, including small arms and light weapons. The army does not manufacture, produce or export any type of weapon or ammunition. All the weapons in its possession have been either imported or confiscated. No weapons of mass destruction are present in Lebanon. In that connection, the Ministry of Defence proposes that the scope of the Register be extended to include weapons of mass destruction.

Qatar

[13 May 2014]

The State of Qatar possesses only conventional weapons, and strives to ensure that it has only the minimum that is necessary to safeguard its territory. It is not seeking to stockpile weapons in quantities surplus to its needs, and is working to reduce its imports of conventional weapons.

Light weapons in the State of Qatar are held exclusively by the security forces. The possession of small arms by civilians is regulated by Act No. 14 of 1999 on arms, ammunition and explosives and its annexed tables, as amended by Act No. 26 of 2010, and by the implementing regulations contained in Ministerial Decision No. 30 of 2013. Those instruments set forth licensing terms for the possession, acquisition or trade in such weapons.

With regard to transfers of small arms and light weapons, Act No. 40 of 2002 on customs provides for controls to secure the country's entry and exit points in order to ensure that no prohibited items, including varieties of weapons, are brought into the country.

European Union

[Original: English]
[29 May 2014]

The European Union believes that the scope of the Register should be expanded to include small arms and light weapons as a stand-alone category because:

(a) Small arms and light weapons are not among the regular categories of the Register, thereby limiting its relevance because, for many States Members of the United Nations, small arms and light weapons are often the only arms that are actually traded;

(b) The Arms Trade Treaty, adopted by the General Assembly on 2 April 2013, requires States parties to report annually on their imports and exports of arms covered by the Treaty. The Treaty covers the seven Register categories, in addition to small arms and light weapons, and provides that the report may contain the same information submitted by the State party to relevant United Nations frameworks, including the Register. Aligning the scope of the Register with the scope of arms covered by the Treaty would facilitate reporting under both instruments.
